Editors Notes by Rich Prange

So you thought the Department of Transportation was a huge marble monolith in Washington D.C. To this writer's consternation it is actually a nice healthy bush located at the intersection of New Jersey Avenue and "M" St. S.E.

Trip to the "House of Cards" Our capital proved to be a challenge for simple navigation from "point A to point B". "Point A" being a real surprise, a national park (with camping) just 12 miles from the heart of D.C. "Point B" was the Metro system located near College Park MD.

My brave wife and I choose to use the Metro to avoid the big city driving and parking nightmares. We earn three college credits just learning how to purchase a pass. Metro trains dive below the city surface then pop up at numerous stations to regurgitate their human cargo. The sudden rapid change from zero to negative altitude left me with muscular ear drums, but no added hearing improvement.

There were occasions to go out and compete with D.C. traffic, the pucker factor approaches ten.

I am now qualified to drive the 24 Hours of La Mons. A national park near D.C. was an interesting find. Nice campsites, heavy forest to muffle city noise and the price was right if you hold an old geezer card. However, there was another price - blood sucking parasites. I'm not talking politicians - ticks. Wisconsin and Washington D.C. were to square off in an Olympics of tick competition, D.C. would win all the gold.

Observations
A sign along a freeway, "Next Time Fly to Work".

If you are not carrying a brief case in D.C. you are a tourist or homeless.

If you are not in the back seat of a Lincoln Town car you are a tourist or homeless.

The alley way next to the Department of Agriculture has a bumper crop of dandelions.

The Department of Energy building could use new energy efficient windows.

Pennsylvania Turn Pikes have alternate turn pikes.

Indiana may have reinvented the concept of road repair.

A new form of rudeness is to jump in front of someone to shoot a "selfie".

If you are young, dressed in black, and have a gun, you are probably employed on Pennsylvania Ave.

Memorials and Monuments

I thought it was important for my grandson to visit the war memorials. At age 10 he is a bit of a history buff so he was attentive and got a slight feel for these historic events - well worth the long walks and time. The middle leg of our trip was Gettysburg. Here and now 2014, the Gettysburg battle field was sobering, haunting and beautiful. What an awful slice of history.

EAA AIRVENTURE
Don't forget the Red Barn at AirVenture. This is a good time to sell you unused/unwanted aviation stuff.

Jim Cody is your go to guy; his crew does a good job marketing your items.

Check the EAA website for workshop and event schedules. I plan to take a day off from the seaplane base and take my grandson to KidsVenture; he is at a perfect age.

Humor (bad puns)
Traveling on a flying carpet is a rugged business.

A glide path is a soar spot.
He became a sky diver out of the blue.

Keep your needle in the green.

Tuesday Fly Night

Greetings Tuesday night fliers. Despite the high winds the June third fly in at Little Chicago drew a few aircraft. The June 17th outing at Rusk County had to be scrubbed due to winds and scattered rain showers. The following Tuesday was great flying weather and several aircraft made it to Lady-smith. A thank you is in order to June hosts Russ Post and Jim Cote.

July destinations start with a get together at Gateway on the first hosted by Mike Riley. I must apologize for not getting the needed info out in the June newsletter. Hopefully those flying in those driving, take hwy 29 west out of AUW. Turn south on highway B through Marathon City. Approximately six miles south on B watch for Harold's sign on the west side of the road, which is about 100 yards NW of Spring Brook Road. Check a map if coming from the south.

July 15th takes us to Eagle River hosted by Pat and Debby Kenny. When you taxi on to the main ramp at EGV, look for the open hangar behind the rotating beacon. August 5th takes us to Scherrico Meadows hosted by Harold Schauer. Harold has a 2600' east/west runway located at N44 50 34 by W089 47 82. Use 122.675 in the pattern. There
