The Etna airport now sports a new windsock. The old one was in tatters. It was in tatters because it was difficult to replace. We actually had two replacements available.

This is one of the many reasons we miss Damon Chalmers. He was light enough and agile enough and willing enough to shinny up the pole and replace it.

So... we used a long ladder and supported pole with a backhoe bucket and attempted to replace the sock. We found that we still couldn't reach it well enough and that the bearings had completely failed.

So... we decide it was high time we figured out a better way.

So... we cut down the pole, repaired the bearings and fitted it with a tilt up mechanism.

So... Now there is a new windsock up there swiveling in the slightest breeze.

This work was in no way directed or sponsored by the local EAA chapter. Individuals working on this were acting on their own recognizance.

First Flight!

Congratulations to David Brown.

He made his first flight in his recently completed Sonex B. The flight went well. No issues other than some needed trim adjustments.
